MANGNOSEN, CLIVE; POSTMORTEM REPORT.

At 1345 hours on 6 June at the City Morgue with P.C.C. Horsnell I performed a post-mortem examination on a body he pointed out to me as that of Clive Mangnosen.

The body was that of a well nourished male child of about two years. The two year molars had not completely erupted. Both pupils were even and partly dilated. There were no external markings of note. Postmortem lividity was intense behind. Rigor mortis was absent but the impression was gained that it had broken down. There was no rigidity of the jaw. The body temperature was 55 degrees F. There were no marks of decomposition externally or internally.

The scalp and skull were free from signs of injury or disease. The brain was covered with congested blood vessels and much free blood escaped on opening the skull. There was considerable excess of cerebro-spinal fluid. There was no sign of disease or injury to the brain.

The tongue, trachea, larynx thyroid and aorta were all quite normal. There was appreciable congestion of the oesophagus in the upper and lower halves.

Both lungs were congested in their lower lobes and contained thick dark blood the upper lobes were less congested. There was no sign of disease.

The heart was about normal size and entirely free from defect of the valves, their orifices, the coronaries and their orifices, though the left had two openings. The heart muscle was dark and healthy.

There was a little partly digested food in the stomach with some fluid and a number of white granules up to 2mm in diameter. There was no congestion of the mucosa. The pylorus and duodenum and remainder of the intestines were all normal.

The pancreas and liver were deeply congested and there was much free dark blood in the latter.

Both kidneys were very dark with congestion but otherwise normal. The spleen was small and dark.

Both adrenals were normal. Both testes were in the inguinal canals but normal. The bladder was normal.

The normal appendix lay curled on the pelvic brim.

Summary: There was no evidence of deprivation of food or fluid. The body was in a good state of nutrition. The effects of exposure are not determined but the cold of the last few days may have exerted an influence in the death of this child. Nevertheless there is considerable evidence of congestion of many organs and the appearance of the kidneys and lungs would be quite consistent with barbiturate poisoning.

Cause of death: Possibly barbiturate poisoning, the effects of exposure are not determined.

SUBJECT: Death of Clive MANGNOSON, born June 19, 1947, so of Keith Waldemar and Roma Dawn MANGNOSON, of 10, Magarey Terrace, Largs Bay.

-----000-----

Sir,

I have the honour to submit my report to you touching the death of Clive MANGNOSON, born June 19, 1947, only child of Keith Waldemar and Roma Dawn MANGNOSON, of 10, Magarey Terrace, Largs Bay, whose body was found in a superphosphate sack on the ground amongst some densely growing box-thorn bushes on the beach in front of Fort Largs, Largs Bay, on the morning of Monday, the 6th inst. and in doing so I propose prefacing the detailed statements of witnesses with a brief summary of the facts so that you will be able to see at once not only how, when, and by what means the deceased came to his death but also that he came to his death by being murdered by his father, without having to wade through the evidence.

The deceased's father is 35 years of age. When he was but 14 years old he left home and worked on farms in the country until early in 1940, when he got lost in heavy scrub country at near Nadda where he was engaged in wood cutting. After the lapse of several days he was found lying unconscious and suffering from severe sunburn in an empty horse trough. After spending several weeks in the Loxton Public Hospital under the care of the late Doctor Tanko, he was removed to the Royal Adelaide Hospital and later to the Convalescent Hospital at Magill. The doctor who was attending him at the latter informed Magnoson's mother that her son was not responding to treatment and advised her to have him placed in the Enfield Receiving Home. He was taken to the Home where he remained for three months, and then his mother took him to a farm at Alma Plains where he stayed for a few weeks.

On May 11, 1941, Mangnoson enlisted in the Australian Imperial Forces and served as a Private with the 2/48th Australian Infantry Battalion in the Middle East and later on in the Pacific Area, where he contracted malaria and suffered with war neurosis. On his return to Australia he was admitted to the Military Hospital at Northfield and remained there until he was discharged from the Services on February 7, 1945. He then returned to his mother's home at 12, Magarey Terrace, Largs Bay and remained there until he was married in the following May. His wife was 15 years of age at the time and after their marriage they went to live with the wife's mother (Mrs. S.M. McIntyre) next door to his mother's home. He obtained employment at a flour mill in Port Adelaide until June 14, 1948 when part of his dwelling-house - which he had purchased from Mrs. McIntyre shortly before - was destroyed by fire. His loss was not covered by insurance and from then he seemed to lose interest in everything except his child (the deceased) and suffered severely with a relapse of war neurosis.

On November 11, 1948, without giving the slightest warning or indication, he left home taking with him £20 in money and the plans of their new home which was to be built on a block of land he had purchased through the Repatriation Department at Richmond and remained away for several days. When he returned home he was shaking badly and seemed to be a nervous wreck and he had lost both the money and plans and was unable to say what he had done with either.

Doctor A.P. Cherry, who had been and still is, the family's doctor, examined Mangnoson on the day he returned home and ordered him to the Enfield Receiving Home, where he remained for about seven weeks. Shortly after his discharge he obtained employment with the S.A. Electricity Trust at Osborne and stayed in his employment there. On February 17, last he started to receive a pension of £10.12.0d. a fortnight from the Repatriation Department, but on the 31st of March the amount was reduced to £5.10.0d. a fortnight.

During the week ended Saturday, May 28, last, Mangnoson had worked night shift and as a result he was off duty the whole of the following (last) week. When he rose from his bed each morning his wife noticed him shaking badly and staring vacantly. He refused to eat his evening meal last Wednesday nor his breakfast on the following morning, and he told his wife that morning that he would get some firewood from a wood merchant on Military Road from whom he had previously purchased a quantity and said he would take Clive (the deceased) with him. At half-past nine he left with Clive and went towards Military Road. As he had not returned at ten o'clock and fearing he had wandered away with the child, Mrs. Mangnoson went to the wood yard and learned that he had not been there that morning. She made some other inquiries for him in the locality and then went to Semaphore Police Station and reported the matter to the Constable on duty there at the time.

Mrs. Mangnoson's mother, who has been under medical treatment for a number of years, purchased 30 one grain Phenobarbitone tablets and put the bottle containing them behind some ornaments on top of a chest of drawers in her bedroom. Last Friday morning - the day after Mangnoson disappeared - she discovered the bottle of tablets was missing. At first she thought she might have mis-laid them, but on remembering that about a month earlier Mrs. Mangnoson found a bottle containing several Phenobarbitone tablets belonging to her (Mrs. McIntyre) in a shirt pocket of her husband in a wardrobe and which he said he had picked up in their yard and had put away so their child could not get them, Mrs. McIntyre began to suspect that Mangnoson had taken her lost bottle of tablets with him the previous day.

A search party consisting of several policemen and a large number of civilians was organised and they searched and re-searched every nook and corner between Largs Bay and Outer Harbor, without result. On the morning of Monday, the 6th inst., Mr. N.W. McRae, a neighbour and friend of the Mangnsons, found Mangnoson sitting on the ground amongst some densely growing box-thorn bushes on the beach in front of Fort Largs. The Police were notified and Sergeant Ridley proceeded to the scene and found the missing man sitting on a heap of nine superphosphate sacks with his knees drawn up gazing vacantly towards the sea, mumbling and shivering with cold. He was assisted to his feet and the Sergeant then noticed another superphosphate sack lying on the ground nearby and on pulling open its mouth he saw the head of the deceased inside and he also found an empty bottle nearby which Mrs. McIntyre subsequently identified as the one she missed from her bedroom.

Eight of the sacks on which Mangnoson had been sitting and the one in which the deceased's body was found are branded with the trade mark of Adelaide Chemical & Fertilisers Company Limited and the other one on which he was sitting was branded with the trade mark of Wallaroo-Mount Lyell Fertilisers Limited, and they were all quite dry. A copy of "The Advertiser," newspaper, of Saturday, the 4th inst. was also found nearby. When Mangnoson left home he had more than £2 in money in his possession, but when he was found he had 9d. only, a cigarette lighter, a box about half full of matches, and a pencil rubber, only, in his pockets. These facts would indicate that he had not remained in his hide-out all the time during his absence from his home.

The Police conveyed the body of the deceased and his father in a utility truck to the Port Adelaide Police Station, where Doctor Cherry identified the body as that of the deceased and stated that in his opinion life had been extinct for at least 24 hours. The body was conveyed to the City Mortuary, where Doctor J.M. Dwyer performed a post-mortem examination and certified the cause of death was due possibly to barbiturate poisoning. Certain of the organs and stomach contents were sent to the Government Analyst for analysis to determine the actual cause of death. A copy of the Pathologists report is appended hereto. The Analyst's report will be submitted to you by your Plain Clothes Constable Horsnell.

The Police conveyed Mangnoson in a civil ambulance to the Royal Adelaide Hospital and he was admitted for treatment. On the morning of the 8th inst., Mr. C.E. Tucker, J.P., went to the bedside of Mangnoson at the Hospital, where he took evidence from Doctor A.W. Welch concerning the mentality of the patient and from Detective R.F. Huie relative to his attempted conversation with him, and then pursuant to the provisions of Section 25 of the Mental Defectives Act, 1935-1945, ordered the consignment of Mangnoson to the Parkside Mental Hospital, where Detective Huie conveyed him the same day.

Now I propose to set out in detail the statements of the persons I interviewed in the matter:

ROMA DAWN MANGNOSON, of 10, Magarey Terrace, Largs Bay, wife of Keith Waldemar Mangnoson, now a patient in the Mental Hospital, Parkside, states:

The deceased is my son. His name is Clive Mangnoson, born June 19, 1947. I last saw him at about 9.30 a.m. on Thursday, June 2, 1949, when his father took him away from our home to go to Harmstorff's wood yard, Military Road, Largs North to get some firewood. The deceased was then in good health, although he he had ^{NOT} completely recovered from an attack of bronchitis.

My husband is 35 years of age. I first met him about six months before I married him on May 2, 1945, at Semaphore. When I married him I knew he had served with the Australian Imperial Forces and had been in action in the Middle East and also in the Pacific Area and had suffered with malaria and war neurosis. We were happily married and after the marriage he obtained employment at a flour mill in Port Adelaide and kept his employment until June 14, 1948. On the night of that day I went to a picture show at Semaphore, leaving my husband with the deceased at home. In my absence a fire occurred in the back portion of the house and part of the house as well as a quantity of house-hold effects were destroyed. The loss was not covered by insurance, and the incident seemed to worry my husband and from then he seemed to lose interest in the home and everything else except Clive (the deceased) to whom he was very much attached.

He remained home from work after the fire and on November 11, 1948, without giving any warning or indication of any kind, he left home and was absent for four days. He took £20 in money and the plans of the house we proposed building on an allotment which he had purchased through the Repatriation Department at Richmond, but when he returned home he did not have any of the money or the plans and when I asked him what he had done with the goods he was unable to tell me.

On the day he returned home, Doctor A.P. Cherry was called in and he ordered my husband to Enfield Receiving Home, where he remained about seven weeks. A few days after his discharge he obtained a position as a trimmer with S.A. Electricity Trust at Osborne and he kept his employment there until last week.

During the week ended on Saturday, May 28, last, he was on night shift and as a result he was off duty the whole of the following week. When he rose from his bed two or three mornings last week I noticed he was shaking badly and seemed to have a vacant look in his eyes. He refused to have his evening meal on Wednesday nor would he eat any breakfast on the following morning, and told me he would get a hundredweight of firewood from Harmstorf's on Military Road, Largs North. He had bought a quantity of wood from Harmstorf and he used to bring it home in hundredweight lots on Harmstorf's wheelbarrow as we wanted it. After I had my breakfast I bathed and dressed Clive (the deceased) and as I was doing so I noticed my husband was continually looking at the clock and he repeated several times he would be late.

It was half-past nine by our clock when my husband took Clive by the hand and walked out to Magarey Terrace and they turned and went east along the footpath towards Military Road.

That is the last time I saw either the deceased or my husband.

As my husband had not returned home at ten o'clock, I went to Harmstorf's wood yard and learned that he had not been there that morning. I then made inquiries for him in the locality and then went to the Semaphore Police Station and reported the matter to the policeman on duty there.

My mother has been living with us ever since we were married. I know she had been taking Phenobarbitone tablets for several years. About a month ago I found a bottle with several of her tablets in a pocket of a shirt belonging to my husband in our wardrobe. I asked him what the tablets were doing in his pocket and he told me he had found them in the sand in our yard and had put them away so that Clive (the deceased) could not get them.

Since our marriage I learned that my husband had had malaria and suffered with war neurosis. Early this year he applied for a War Pension and on the 17th of February he started to collect £10.12.0d. a fortnight and on 31st of March that sum was reduced to £5.10.0d. a fortnight.

I have my husband's Military Discharge, Pension Card, and other documents and will produce them to the City Coroner at any time, if asked to do so.

ERNEST PETER GEORGE HARMSTORF, of 549, Military Road, Largs North, Wood Merchant, states:

I have known Mr. Keith Waldemar Mangnoson and his wife for a number of years. They are customers of mine. It was Mr. Mangnoson's practice to purchase several hundredweights of firewood and take it away in hundredweight lots at a time on one of my wheelbarrows. He usually brought his child (the deceased) with him and give him a ride on top of the wood on the barrow. He always seemed very devoted towards his child. { He was not at my premises at any time on Thursday, the 2nd inst. nor did I see him at all that day. The last occasion he was at my premises was on May 30th last, when he had his child with him and he took delivery of a hundredweight of firewood on one of wheelbarrows.

SUSAN MAY McINTYRE, of 10, Magarey Terrace, Largs Bay, Invalid Pensioner, states:

Mrs. Mona Dawn Mangnoson is my daughter and wife of Keith Waldemar Mangnoson. She lived with me before her marriage and since then she and her husband have lived with me. The house where we live belonged to me. I sold it to my son-in-law after he married my daughter. I occupy one of the rooms in the house.

I was a patient of the late Doctor J. Porter and since his death I have been a patient of Doctors A.P. and E.P. Cherry. They have prescribed Phenobarbitone tablets which I have been taking for a number of years. On May 13, last, I obtained a bottle of 30 one grain strength Phenobarbitone tablets from the Friendly Society Chemists, 98, Commercial Road, Port Adelaide. I did not open the bottle and when I reached home I put it intact behind some ornaments on the chest of drawers in my bedroom, and left it there untouched. On the morning of last Friday, the 3rd inst. I dusted down the chest of drawers and the bottle of tablets was not there. I searched high and low for it but did not find it.

The bottle Detective Bond showed me is the missing one.

KENNETH MALCOLM ROHLFING, of 50, Bagot Avenue, Torrensville, Pharmaceutical Chemist, states:

I am branch manager of The Friendly Societies Medical Association, Incorporated, 98, Commercial Road, Port Adelaide. On May 13, 1949, one of my dispensers supplied Mrs. S.M. McIntyre, of 10, Magarey Terrace, Largs Bay, with a bottle containing 30 one grain strength Phenobarbitone tablets, pursuant to the prescription of Doctor E. Cherry which the customer brought and left with my dispenser.

The bottle shewn me by Detective Bond is the bottle supplied to Mrs. McIntyre.

NEIL WILLIAM MCGRAE, of 18, Magarey Terrace, Largs Bay, Trimmer, states:

At about 9.30 a.m. on Monday, the 6th inst. I went to a clump of densely growing box-thorn bushes on the beach in front of Largs Fort, Largs Bay, and climbing through an opening in the bushes I found Mr. Keith Waldemar Mangnoson sitting on the ground. I hurried out and informed the Police and waited in the vicinity until Sergeant Ridley and Constable Juers arrived. I pointed out the spot to them and then left.

FREDERICK SAMUEL RIDLEY, of Police Station, Port Adelaide, Sergeant of Police, states:

At about 10.15 a.m. on Monday, the 6th inst. in company with Police Constable Juers, I went to the beach west of Fort Largs, Largs Bay, where I saw the witness, Mr. N.W. McKae standing. He spoke to me and indicated a spot amongst a clump of densely growing box-thorn bushes. I went to the spot by way of a small track to the middle of the clump of bushes, where I saw Keith Waldemar Mangnoson sitting on some sacks on the ground with his knees drawn up. He was facing west and looking towards the sea with a vacant stare, and was mumbling and shivering with cold. I said to him, "How do you feel, Keith?" He mumbled something which I could not understand. With the assistance of others, I lifted Mangnoson to his feet and I then noticed a superphosphate sack lying on the ground on the southern side of where Mangnoson had been sitting. I pulled the mouth of the bag open and saw the head of a child (the deceased). I pulled the bag down and the body was lying on its side with the head facing north. The child was dead. I picked up the bottle (produced, which I later gave to Detective Bond) from the ground close to the body.

Eight of the nine sacks on which Mangnoson was sitting bore the trade brand of Adelaide Chemical & Fertilisers Company Limited and the other one bore the trade brand of Adelaide Wallaroo-Mount Lyell Fertilisers Limited. The sack in which the body of the deceased was bore the former trade mark. All the sacks were quite dry. I also found a copy of "The Advertiser," newspaper, of Saturday, the 4th inst. on the ground nearby. I searched Mangnoson and he had 9d. 2d., a cigarette lighter, a box about half full of matches and a pencil rubber in his pockets.

With assistance I removed the body of the deceased and his father from the hide-out and into a utility truck to the Port Adelaide Police Station, where Doctor A.P. Cherry identified the body as that of the deceased and stated that in his opinion life had been extinct for at least 24 hours. Later that day I conveyed the body of the deceased to the City Mortuary where I pointed it out to Plain Clothes Constable Horsnell.

Doctor Cherry also examined Mangnoson at the Police Station and ordered his removal to the Royal Adelaide Hospital for treatment. Police Constable Sedgley conveyed him to the hospital in a civil ambulance.

ALAN PERCIVAL CHERRY, of 99, Woolnough Road, Largs Bay, Legally qualified Medical Practitioner, states:

At about 10.45 a.m. on Monday, the 6th inst. I saw the body of a male child in a sack on the tray of a utility truck at Port Adelaide. I immediately identified the body as that of Olive MANGNOSON, born 19th June, 1947, only son of Keith Waldemar and Roma Dawn MANGNOSON, of 10, Magarey Terrace, Largs Bay. In my opinion the child had been dead for a couple of days. I base my opinion on the general condition of the body, particularly the condition of the eyes.

I instructed Sergeant Ridley to remove the body to the City Mortuary.

I also examined the deceased's father last Monday morning at the Port Adelaide Police Station. I was of opinion his physical condition was fair, but his mental condition was most irresponsive. He seemed very similar (mentally) as he was when I ordered him to Enfield Receiving Home last November. I ordered him to be taken to the Royal Adelaide Hospital for treatment.

I have known the deceased's father since June 29, 1948, when he consulted me and told me of the fire which had occurred recently at his house. He seemed very worried and was very upset owing to the fact that he had lost a good deal in the fire and his loss was not covered by insurance. I prescribed a tonic for him.

I had been attending his wife since December 3, 1947 and the deceased since January 7, 1948.

On October 25, 1948 the deceased's father consulted me and I formed the opinion he was suffering from some gall bladder trouble and I sent him to the Royal Adelaide Hospital for investigation. Some days later I ascertained from the hospital that his gall bladder was in order. I did not see him again until November 12, 1948 when I went to his house and found him lying on his bed. He was in a very dazed condition and would not give me any explanation regarding his leaving home. I ordered him to Enfield Receiving Home, pursuant to the provisions of the Mental Defectives Act, where he remained for some weeks.

On April 13, 1949 Mrs. Mangnoson consulted me. She had had a miscarriage shortly before and between that date and the 6th inst. I had seen Mr. Mangnoson frequently at my surgery.

On April 14th he sprained his back at work and he consulted me as a result and he has called at my surgery often since then. The last time I saw him prior to the 6th inst. was on about May 17th at his home. That was the last occasion I saw the deceased alive.

Since Mr. Mangnoson's sojourn at Enfield Receiving Home last November he has had a most peculiar haunted look in his eyes and as a result I have kept an eye on him. He always spoke in a quiet and slightly distant manner and in ^{my} opinion during this period he was not normal mentally.

Mrs. Mangnoson's mother (Mrs. McIntyre) is a patient of mine and my brother partner in the Practice has also treated her. We have prescribed Phenobarbitone tablets for her.

IDA CAROLINE MANGNOSON, of 12, Magarey Terrace, Largs Bay, wife of John Mangnoson, of Blanchetown, Station Hand, states:

Keith Waldemar Mangnoson, of 10, Magarey Terrace, Largs Bay, is my son. He was 35 years of age on May 4, 1949. When he was 14 years of age he left home and worked for a farmer at near Burra for some time. Then he worked for my son-in-law at Blanchetown for four years, then with a cousin of his at Alma Plains for for some time, and then for various vingerons and orchadists at Renmark for about nine months.

Then either late in 1939 or early in 1940 - I am inclined to think it was early in 1940 - he joined his father and worked with him at Madda and districts wood chopping for about three months, when he got lost in the scrub country and was missing for several days. He was found lying unconscious and suffering with severe sunburn in an empty horse trough. He was taken to the Loxton Public Hospital and was there for about seven weeks under the late Doctor Tanko. On the advice of the Doctor I brought him in the train to the Royal Adelaide Hospital, where he was admitted for treatment. On the journey from Loxton he seemed very nervous and became very excited at any noise. He remained in the Hospital for several weeks and then transferred to the Magill Convalescent Home where he remained for several more weeks.

The Doctor attending him at the latter told me my son was not responding to treatment and he advised me to have him put in the Enfield Receiving Home. I took him there and he was admitted and remained there for three months, when on the advice of Doctor Southwood I took him out and to the home of some relatives at Alma Plains, where he stayed for a few weeks, during which time he seemed to recover.

Some time afterwards Keith enlisted with the Australian Imperial Forces and served overseas. When he returned from the Middle East he stayed with me at my present home until he went away again to the Pacific Area. On his return from the Pacific Islands he was admitted to the Northfield Military Hospital, suffering with malaria and war neurosis. After his discharge from the Services he came home and lived there until his marriage, when he went to live with his wife at her mother's house next door to me.

ALFRED CHARLES HORNELL, of City Watch-house, Adelaide, Plain Clothes Constable and Assistant City Coroner's Constable, states:

At about 12 noon on June 6, 1949, I was present at the City Mortuary, West Terrace, Adelaide, when Sergeant Ridley pointed out to me the body of an infant male child which he stated was that of Clive Mangnoson, aged 1 year and 11 months.

At 1.45 p.m. on the same day I was present at the same Mortuary and I pointed the body out to Doctor J.M. Dwyer, who performed a post-mortem examination on the body. I later received from the Doctor certain organs I had seen him take from the body, which I later handed to the Government Analyst (Mr. Cowan).

ROBERT FRANCIS QUINN HUIE, of Criminal Investigation Branch, Adelaide, Detective-Constable, states:

At about 1.10 p.m. on June 7, 1949, I went to Terrace Ward at Royal Adelaide Hospital, where I saw Keith Waldemar Mangnoson, of 10, Magarey Terrace, Largs Bay, in a bed. I tried to have a talk with him, without success. He appeared to be mentally unsound and did not seem to understand any of the questions I put to him.

At about 11 a.m. on the following day, with Doctor A.W. Welch and Mr. C.E. Tucker, J.P., I again went to the same place and saw Mangnoson in bed. The Doctor examined the patient and gave evidence Before Mr. Tucker that in his opinion the patient was mentally defective. Mr. Tucker, pursuant to the provisions of Section 25 of the Mental Defectives Act, 1935-1940, ordered the patient's removal to the Parkside Mental Hospital. Later the same day I conveyed him there in a civil ambulance and he was admitted for treatment.

The Official File in this matter is in the custody of the Clerk of the Adelaide Police Court, from whom it can be had on application to him.

LAWRENCE BOND, of Port Adelaide Police Station, Detective-Constable, states:

I am in charge of this inquiry. There is nothing I can usefully add to what I have already said in prefacing the statements of the persons I interviewed and set out in detail herein, except to say that I have the exhibits mentioned by Sergeant Ridley in his statement and will produce them to you at any time you desire me to do so.

I have the honour to be,

Sir,

Your Obedient Servant.
